The Matsushita Electric Industrial Company and the Ampex Corporation announced that Ampex, based in Redwood City, Calif., had been granted licenses to use Matsushita's patents and technology to make a new generation of thin-film, high-density video recording tapes.

Matsushita, based in Osaka, Japan, granted the same licenses to the 3M Corporation in April 1983 and to BASF of West Germany in September 1983. The licenses last for five years, with an option to extend. They give the licensee the nonexclusive right to manufacture and market the products worldwide, including in Japan.
